Congo is a 1980 science fiction novel by Michael Crichton, the fifth under his own name and the fifteenth overall. The novel centers on an expedition searching for diamonds and investigating the mysterious deaths of a previous expedition in the dense tropical rainforest of the Congo. Crichton calls Congo a lost world novel in the tradition founded by Henry Rider Haggard's King Solomon's Mines, featuring the mines of that work's title.

"Congo" is still typically Crichton, though not as good as, for instance, Jurassic Parc or Airframe. Depicting a race towards a long undiscovered memorial side somewhere in the Congo's rain-forest, it somehow lacks the depth of other Crichton novels as it misses the usually science-fiction component which made, say, "Jurassic Parc" so superbly unique.
